The Egyptian vultures using red mud as 'make-up'

You've probably heard of animals camouflaging themselves, or birds like peacocks showing off their most brightly coloured feathers. But what about wearing make-up, or dyeing their feathers? A species of vulture, which has a yellow face and white feathers, has been spotted trying to colour themselves red. Egyptian vultures dip their heads in soil and rub it from side to side, to dye their head, neck and chest darker. The birds are found on Fuerteventura in the Canary Islands, off the coast of West Africa. But it seems some vultures want to change their look more than others. Some only use a little mud, going for a pale brown shade, while others want to be a deep crimson.

The invention that could clean up Pacific Ocean's plastic waste

The islands in the South Pacific Ocean are full of rubbish. And researchers think almost 38 million pieces of rubbish are on its beaches. No-one lives there but it is home to wildlife. People hope that a new floating barrier can separate out rubbish that gathers in the ocean will be able to help the island. In 5 years the barrier should catch just under half of the rubbish will be removed from the ocean without harming any fish. Hopefully, there shall be a chance to save the environment.

Half-term

Many people agree that this year has been going very fast, as the May half-term has already come! Next week, we have one week to relax but also to revise. For example, the Year Six have started to begin their majestic production, Aladdin. They also have finished their SATs and now can relax and enjoy their last few weeks. A boy from year 5, by the name of Joel, stated 'Year 5 was so much fun, but quick, as there are only a few more weeks till Year Six!' You could say that Joel is right, after asking various people around the school his thought was right.

Creams launches Derren Brown's 'greatest illusion ever seen in the dessert world'

Creams have launched a ghoulish milkshake which they say plays the "greatest illusion ever seen in the dessert world". The Illusionary Freakshake has been created by Creams, in partnership with Derren Brown's Ghost Train at Thorpe Park. The horrifying-looking drink does not actually contain any ghostly slime - although you'd be forgiven for thinking that - it's made from a blend of milk, vanilla ice cream and a Bounty bar. The coconut-flavored treat is then whizzed together with a green colouring powder which changes the customary cream shade into vivid verdian. It's then topped off with more soft vanilla ice cream, chocolate sauce and kiwi sauce, wafers, chocolate curls and an Oreo cookie. The customers who had tried this new, unusual milkshake had enjoyed it and loved the exotic, peculiar flavor and recommend it to others as well!

Hounslow Night of Festivals to animate high street with colourful carnival

The annual event will take place for the third year over Saturday June 10 and Sunday June 11. The Night of Festivals returns to Hounslow High Street for a vibrant weekend of carnival, world music, entertainment and cricket in June. The festival, which celebrates the 70th anniversary of Indian and Pakistan independence, will take place for the third year over Saturday June 10 and Sunday June 11. Celebrating values of freedom through artistic innovation, Night of Festivals is a free event that will animate Hounslow High Street with colourful carnival activity.
