Denmark Buys Country's Last Remaining Circus Elephants for $1.6 Million So They Can Retire

The government of Denmark has just bought the last of the country's circus elephants so they can live out the rest of their lives in peaceful retirement.

The government reportedly paid 11 million kroner ($1.6 million) for the elephants in anticipation of the country passing a ban on wild circus animals later this year.

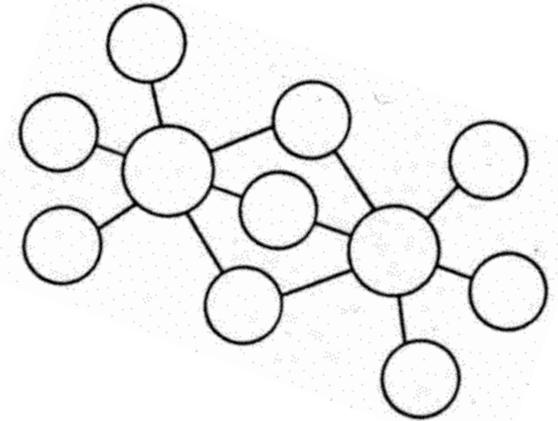

The elephants, Ramboline, Lara, Djunga, and Jenny, were purchased from two different circuses. Though the government has no immediate plans for where the animals will live out their retirement, Animal Protection Denmark will reportedly be caring for the creatures until they can find a more permanent home.

10-year-old Boy passes his GCSE's

A very smart 10-year-old from Hillington was overjoyed after receiving a Grade 8 in GCSE Maths - the equivalent of an A in old money. Jalal Farooq may have been six years younger than the other students waiting to collect their results at Cranford Community College in Hounslow, but he was just as nervous, as them, even though he passed the exam. As well as passing the exam, it took a lot of hard work to get there, including practicing every day at home. His reward for this big achievement, was to pick a pet he wanted to keep, and so he picked a hamster.
